Final Days to See “School House to White House” Education of the Presidents Exhibit Fascinating for Whole Family

Some came from small rural schools; some had private tutors. Some played musical instruments; others were active in sports. See the making of future presidents as they grow from the “School House to White House.”

There are only a few days left to see “School House to White House: The Education of the Presidents.” The last day is Sunday, Jan. 4, 2009. “School House” shows how thirteen presidents, from Herbert Hoover to George W. Bush, grew up doing the same things other school children did: taking tests, writing essays, taking part in school activities.

The Washington Post says “they were, at the start, fairly ordinary kids. And that’s what this display celebrates. What all 13 shared, though, was the desire to learn new things and then do something with that knowledge. And that’s something we all have in common.”

Journey back to a time of one room school houses, large public schools, and private tutors. See these future presidents as young sports stars, choir members, and musicians. Watch them mature into serious college and military academy students. Together these experiences demonstrate the variety of educational and extra-curricular experiences that trained and influenced our nation’s future leaders.

This is an exhibition the whole family will find fascinating.
