Scope and Content:

This collection consists of correspondence, memorandums, speeches, notes, reports, news clippings, articles, publications; and photographs, audio cassettes, and video cassettes. The material in this collection relates to Mary King's role in the 1976 presidential campaign regarding women's issues and health care issues; her career as Deputy Director of ACTION including the Peace Corps and VISTA; and detailed material on the United Nations Conference on the Decade for Women.

Creator Information: Mary E. King

After graduating college, Mary King became a staff member for the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC). She wrote a book on that four-year experience, Freedom Song: A Personal Story of the 1960s Civil Rights Movement and won a Robert F. Kennedy Memorial Book Award for it. King's participation in the Civil Rights Movement prompted her to co-write essays on women's issues with fellow activist Casey Hayden, most notably Sex and Caste: A Kind of Memo (1965), which criticized sexism within the civil rights movement. Sara Evans attributes King and Hayden as founding activists for the women's liberation movement in her book "Personal Politics." Evans claims that King and Hayden used their knowledge of participatory democracy, learned through SNCC membership, to critique women's position in a system of patriarchy. She says their essays stirred the beginning of women's liberation.

Between 1968 and 1972, she worked for the federal government during the Johnson and Nixon administrations under the U.S. Office of Economic Opportunity helping to set up neighborhood health services for America's rural and urban poor. And in 1974, Mary King, with five other women, established the National Association of Women Business Owners. She was president of the Organization in 1976. King was appointed Deputy Director of the independent subcabinet federal agency ACTION that housed the Peace Corps, VISTA, and various programs of the agency under President Jimmy Carter.

Mary resides with her husband, Dr. Peter G. Bourne, in Virginia in the United States and in Oxford in the United Kingdom.
