Eric Rudolph Author to Speak at the Carter Presidential Library

Lecture and Book Signing Are Open to the Public at No Charge

ATLANTA, GA.- CNN producer Henry Schuster tells the fascinating true story of the five-year manhunt for accused bomber Eric Rudolph. It was a manhunt that, according to Schuster, should never have had to happen. Together with Georgia Bureau of Investigations Agent Charles Stone, Schuster explains that miscommunications between the FBI and the North Carolina Sheriff in the early stages of the investigation let Rudolph slip away. Schuster and Stone interviewed Rudolph's family and friends to give this vivid portrait of the self-proclaimed survivalist.

The Jimmy Carter Presidential Library and Museum will host Henry Schuster and Charles Stone for a discussion of their book along with a book signing at 8 p.m., Wednesday, April 20th. The lecture and book signing are free and open to the public.
