To Ansel Adams

I really enjoyed being with you, & look forward to seeing the result of your work. The book and photograph will be my prized possessions for life.

I met with leaders of the key environmental groups the day after your visit, and discussed your letters with them and with my staff. All of us consider the protection of Alaskan lands the top environmental issue of our time which we can address in an incisive & substantive way.

It's good to have you as a friend and partner.

With gratitude & admiration --

My dear Mr. President,

As I approach my 78th year, I realize that a great part of my life has been devoted to conservation, chiefly related to the national parks. I am profoundly concerned with the success of your Alaskan program, and I have the greatest admiration for your strong leadership in this area. It is particularly crucial that you continue this strong leadership as this historic legislation goes to the Senate.

I am also deeply concerned with the protection of the majestic part of the California coast which we inclusively call the Big Sur. This is probably my final major effort in the conservation movement.

I am enclosing two memos, one on the Big Sur and the other relating to my thoughts and concerns on Alaska. I am indeed proud to have the opportunity to present these memoranda to a truly great conservation President. I shall be honored if you will give them your personal attention. At the invitation of Mrs. Mondale, I have enthusiastically endorsed your re-election, and I assure you that my helpfulness in any way is at your command.

Very sincerely,

W

TO: The President

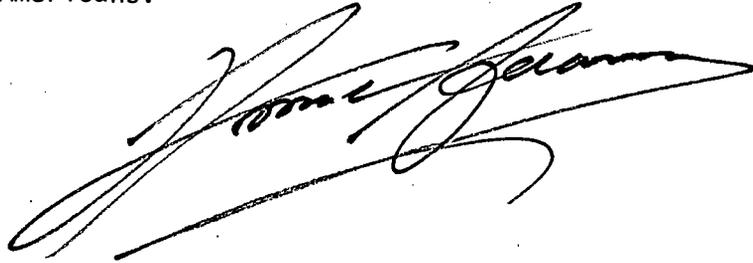

REGARDING: Protection of the Big Sur Coast

The Big Sur region, between San Francisco and Los Angeles, is often regarded as the most beautiful part of California, and perhaps the most scenic coastal area in North America. For much of its 95-mile length south of Monterey, Big Sur is in a remarkably natural state--but development pressures are increasing rapidly. The state of California, through its coastal planning process, is making a real effort to protect the Big Sur Coast. It is clear, however, that the state has neither the resources nor the authority to do the job on its own. The U.S. Forest Service, which manages the adjacent Los Padres National Forest and the Ventana Wilderness, is prepared to assume the appropriate responsibilities. The National Park Service would also be able to manage this area most effectively.

As a photographer, a conservationist and a nearby resident, I have long had a very deep personal interest in the protection of this magnificent, rugged coast, located as it is within a five-hour drive of nearly twenty million people. Two million visitors drive Coastal Highway #1 along the Big Sur each year and this number is growing rapidly. At the same time, development pressures and residential construction gravely threaten the wild beauty of the area and further delays in protection are likely to be irreversible.

During the past two years I have worked with a group of local citizens to develop a concept for federal protection of this great national treasure. Our local Congressman, Leon Panetta, has pledged his support. Phil Burton and Alan Cranston are working with us to develop our proposal and have enthusiastically assumed the leadership roles in the effort to save the Big Sur Coast. Phil and Sala Burton were our houseguests for Easter weekend and Alan and Norma Cranston stayed with us for a weekend earlier this Fall. We were able to spend considerable time touring the area and they are very well informed on the great potentials of this concept. In addition, Secretary Andrus visited last month and inspected the area with me. He has promised his full support. We all agree that 1980 is the critical year, and legislation will be introduced in January or February.

Mr. President, I am personally asking for your strong leadership in the effort to secure legislation in 1980 to establish a Big Sur National Scenic Area, which would allow the U.S. Forest Service or the National Park Service to purchase threatened lands, restrict development and properly manage the area. We estimate that less than $100 million will be needed to create the Scenic Area--a modest price for the protection of 95 miles of the finest and most accessible coastline in America. I hope we can join forces to leave a significant and lasting legacy for future generations of Americans.

TO: The President

REGARDING: Protection of the Alaska National Interest Lands

During my many years of involvement in efforts to preserve the American earth, the most important campaign in which I have participated is the great crusade to protect the Alaska National Interest Lands. The very concept of a civilization having the sense of wise stewardship of so vast and magnificent a land resource as the park, wildlife refuge, wilderness and wild river units established by this legislation marks a great moment in the history of Western man. No generation anywhere will ever again have the opportunity to preserve so much with such good reason.

The role that you, Mr. President, and your Administration have played in advancing the protection of Alaska's wildlands is truly extraordinary and, in my view, the centerpiece of your Presidency. Your establishment of the National Monuments a year ago will be recorded as one of the great and bold acts in conservation history. As you know, the force behind the campaign to save Alaska has been the many thousands of conservation-minded citizens throughout the country who have urged their elected representatives to support the Alaska lands legislation. It is their efforts that have given our campaign its remarkable power, and which has resulted in the stunning victory for the Udall-Anderson bill in the House.

Now, of course, the Alaska lands bill approaches its most difficult Congressional hurdle: Senate floor action. The Senate Energy Committee has voted to report a bill far below the minimum standard for acceptable legislation. The Committee's bill is weaker than the Breaux-Dingell bill that was defeated in the House. It violates ecosystem integrity, creates bureaucratic confusion, and fails to protect the unique Alaska wildlife and wilderness values which lie at the heart of this long effort to secure legislation. Some of the major failings of the Energy Committee's Alaska lands bill (as compared to the House passed bill, which you endorsed) are:

The President
6 November 1979

- It denies wilderness protection to numerous areas in the Tongass National Forest, contrary to the recommendations of your Administration and of the U.S. Forest Service. These areas are the most threatened by logging and mining in the entire state. Large portions of three proposed forest wilderness units would receive no permanent protection: Misty Fjords, Admiralty Island and West Chichagof-Yakobi. The Senate Committee bill also would violate the long established principle of sustained yield forestry by mandating a cut level the forest resource cannot sustain.
- It mandates oil and gas exploration by private industry in the Arctic National Wildlife Range. You and Secretary Andrus have steadfastly advocated wilderness designation for the wildlife range, forbidding oil exploration.
- It allows mining and related development in two National Park System units, the Gates of the Arctic and Wrangell-St. Elias.
- It deletes 38 million acres of House-approved additions to the National Wildlife Refuge System and cuts 23 million acres of wilderness units on refuge lands that the House also approved. The proposed Nowitna Refuge is designated a national forest. The existing Yukon Flats National Wildlife Monument, which you created, is divided among the Bureau of Land Management, U.S. Forest Service, state of Alaska and its present manager, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service--a disastrous bureaucratic menage, as well as an inadequate level of resource protection. The recommended boundaries of other refuge units also are reduced by the Energy Committee bill, including the additions to the Arctic National Wildlife Range and the proposed Togiak, Selawik and Tetlin National Wildlife Refuges.

Having noted some of the grosser defects that make the Energy Committee's Alaska lands bill unacceptable, allow me to express the conservation community's great concern that forfeiture of the opportunity to overhaul the Committee's bill on the Senate floor must not be the price paid for expeditious scheduling of floor action. You and your Administration can point proudly to your record on the Alaska Lands issue. I must say, Mr. President, that any action by your Administration that results in a diminished opportunity for strengthening the bill on the Senate floor will considerably tarnish that record in the eyes of conservationists and of the future historians who will put the events of today into the perspective of history.

The President

The Alaska Coalition has worked steadily for three years gathering Senate support for a stronger Alaska lands bill than the version reported by the Energy Committee. Bill Turnage, Executive Director of The Wilderness Society (and for seven years prior, my business manager and close associate) tells me that there is a good chance the Committee's bill can be significantly strengthened on the Senate floor--if that option is not foreclosed by a restrictive time-agreement or by other agreements that limit our ability to mount a full-fledged grassroots campaign prior to the floor fight.

The conservation community is concerned that the actions of members of your Administration could seriously jeopardize the quality of the final Senate bill by an overeagerness to get a bill--at any price. Discussions with Senators Stevens, Gravel and Jackson leading to expedient solutions that preempt sufficient improvement of the Committee bill on the Senate floor is not the way to accomplish your stated goals for the proper preservation of Alaska lands.

This is the time to stand strong, Mr. President. It is the State of Alaska and their industry allies that are making the initiatives for closed-door deals because they see it as the way for them to get the best bill. The Administration and the conservation community working together can win the necessary protections on the Senate floor.

This is the time to talk of major improvements in the Senate bill and to give the Senate as a whole a clear alternative. We should not be talking of "a few little amendments that have nothing to do with energy." We must not send conflicting signals to the Senate. This is the time--more than ever--for the Administration and the conservation community to make common cause for the preservation of Alaska. I will personally be joining Larry Rockefeller, Cathy Douglas and Chuck Clusen in visits to key Senators tomorrow and Thursday. I hope the Administration will be "with us" as we pursue our efforts to save wild Alaska.

In summary, for the past three years conservationists have committed unprecedented amounts of time, talent and money to the Alaska lands campaign. Now, on the verge of a Senate floor fight, our goal cannot be action itself, but significant improvement of the Energy Committee bill. There is no reason to back off from your existing actions and positions regarding Alaska. Together, Mr. President, I am certain we can indeed do this one right the first time!

My dear Mr. President,

I wish to express my appreciation for the cheerful cooperation I received from you and your staff in the rather complex assignment of making your portrait on Tuesday. I have every reason to believe they were successful. The black-and-white photographs will be processed by me as soon as I return to Carmel on Thursday.

It was a delightful personal experience and a very special honor to meet the President of the United States as well as a man who has taken such bold stands in the domains of conservation. I am always surprised when I realize I have had close associations for more than sixty years with the great expressions of Nature that our country affords. I have observed both very good and very bad happenings in our Natural Scene; many wise and foolish decisions, devotions and exploitations. But, on the whole, we are progressing! Your incredibly bold actions on Alaska, the continuing enlargement of Wilderness areas, and the general concern for the wild, rural and urban environment are indeed heartening. I confess to impatience at times, wishing for everything to happen at once! But wisdom gradually prevails, and I have concluded that my best service lies in creative imagery in my chosen medium and a gentle but persistent pressure on all concerned to protect all that we have that deserves protection--yet not lose sight of the realities of our resources, logically assigned, enhanced and applied, to the progress of our American civilization.

I wish to add that I looked forward to making your portrait with a certain amount of trepidation, simply because of the awesome implications of your high office and the serious national and international problems with which you constantly contend. I feared that I might not be able to overcome some evidence of serious concern in my photographs. However, I was amazed at the impression of relaxation, warmth and self-possession you gave at all times and which was so gratifyingly revealed in the portraits. The feeling of confidence you expressed was extraordinary and this feeling was infectious; I left the White House with a conviction of security and grateful awareness of your intelligence and compassion. I have met many of our country's leaders and creative forces in the past half-century. I hope I can say to you,

8 November 1979

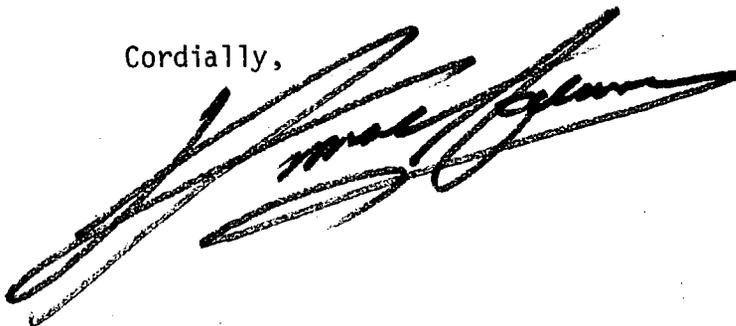

Mr. President--without seeming to fawn--that few if any have given me the warm and direct sense of inner peace and dignity that I found in our brief, hectic encounter. It was, indeed, one of the most significant experiences of my life.

I was deeply touched by your most kind invitation to spend Thanksgiving with you and your family in Georgia. My wife, son and daughter and our five collective grandchildren have been scheduled for more than a month to join close friends and their children for a Thanksgiving celebration, and it would be quite difficult to alter these plans.

However, some day I shall come to Georgia. I know it is an area of great natural beauty. I hope, too, that we shall have time for quieter, more philosophical conversation--we have so many mutual concerns that affect our country and our children and their children.

Again, my appreciation and warmest greetings to you and your charming wife. I look forward to your response to my notes on Alaska and Big Sur, and to our next meeting.

Cordially,

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

November 10, 1979

Dear Barry:

I am grateful for your letter of October 22 and the frank advice it contains. I am replying in the same spirit.

Before deciding to terminate the Mutual Defense Treaty with Taiwan, I carefully considered my power to do so, and there were consultations not only with the State Department lawyers, but also with President Eisenhower's Attorney General, Herbert Brownell. Mr. Brownell believes the President has the power to act as I did and made a strong statement to that effect during hearings before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee in April 1979. The same view is held by the present Attorney General and Solicitor General.

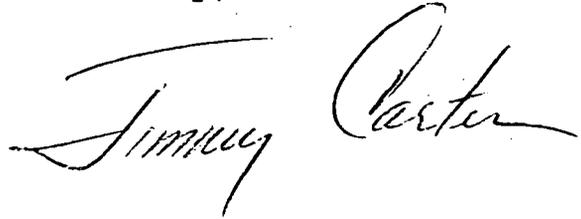

Although the District Court decided in your favor, the Court of Appeals has agreed to hear argument on our appeal on November 13. The Attorney General believes that the Court of Appeals will render a prompt decision, so that if necessary the case can be reviewed by the Supreme Court by the year-end. Accordingly, we have concluded it is better to await at least one more level of decision before considering the advisability of an effort to have the Senate ratify the notice of termination of the Taiwan Treaty..

As you doubtless know, the leaders of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee have reached a similar conclusion with respect to the question of whether to include in the resolution on SALT II a provision dealing with Senate participation in any future withdrawal from that Treaty. As Senator Javits noted on behalf of himself and Senator Church, the question of an appropriate Senate role is an extremely complex one, and they have decided to postpone any recommendation until they have the benefit of the Court of Appeals decision in the Taiwan case.

After the Court of Appeals decision, we shall review the matter again, and then consult further with you and other leaders of the Senate.

Sincerely,

MEMORANDUM FOR: THE PRESIDENT
FROM: STU EIZENSTAT Stu
JIM MCINTYRE Jim
SUBJECT: Paperwork Reduction

While the burden of filling out Federal forms has been cut 15% during your Administration, continued progress is threatened by massive, new reporting requirements in energy, toxic substances control, and other programs. A stepped-up management program is needed to continue cutting the paperwork burden, and we have worked with Congress to develop legislation and an Executive Order. The main elements of this program are:

Paperwork budget. Each agency will submit, at the beginning of each fiscal year, an estimate of the man-hours of reporting it will impose on the private sector. For executive agencies, OMB may order this total reduced and will hold the agencies to the budgeted limit. For all agencies, the budget will ensure that they are aware of the total burden they are imposing and will force them to set priorities and trade off paperwork requirements. In the past, agencies often imposed paperwork for their own convenience without considering its burdens; the budget will help ensure they do consider cost.

Unified oversight. At present, the Federal Reports Act gives OMB the power to clear or reject reporting requirements by most executive agencies. Five years ago, Congress, in anger at the Nixon Administration, exempted the independent regulatory commissions and a few other programs from that process. The bill will bring those agencies back under OMB, so there is one central clearinghouse. In addition, it will close loopholes in the original Reports Act for bank supervisory agencies and the IRS.

Information Locator. The SBA small business advocacy office is creating an index of Federal forms, and OMB is establishing a computerized list of the kinds of information collected. Before an agency collects data, it will check to see if another agency already has it.

Special Treatment for Small Organizations. Paperwork, like most regulatory requirements, inevitably places heavier burdens on small organizations rather than big ones. Data gathering that may be easy for a corporation with computerized records may be very hard for a small businessman who keeps his records by hand. The bill will require agencies to consider smaller or less frequent reports or exemptions for small entities.

Sunset. Paperwork requirements will be reviewed every five years and terminated unless reapproved.

Statistical Confidentiality and Oversight. One reason for duplicative data gathering is that much statistical information is collected under pledges of confidentiality that prevents agency from sharing it. The paperwork bill includes a provision allowing some sharing of business lists to reduce duplication. In addition, we have developed a separate, broader bill to reduce duplication and strengthen the collection and use of statistics. A memo on that proposal will go to you shortly.

Reports Elimination. At your direction, OMB has completed its review of executive branch reports to Congress and has developed legislation to eliminate or modify 224 of them. (This would be a separate bill but would be submitted with the rest of the package.) An additional 54 will be eliminated through administrative action. Annual savings are estimated at $5.5 million or more.

We think we will be able to reach final agreement on the broad paperwork reduction bill with the key Congressional leaders (Sens. Ribicoff and Chiles, Reps. Brooks and Horton) late this month. If so, we recommend a Presidential Message on paperwork reduction and a brief ceremony with those Congressmen to announce the bills and sign the Executive Order. This will be a way for you to take credit for the progress already made and to demonstrate your continuing commitment to cutting red tape.

SUBJECT:

Phone Call to Scotty Campbell

As you know Scotty Campbell was very eager to be Secretary of Education and was greatly disappointed when he was not selected.

I did not know then

I recommend that you call Scotty to let him know how highly you value the contribution he has made to the Administration. Talking points follow:

1. Apologize for not calling earlier, but the past two weeks have been pretty hectic.
2. No agency head in my administration has rendered more brilliant service than you have.
3. I am personally convinced that Shirley Hufstedler will do a superlative job as the first Secretary of Education. It was still a tough choice, however, because I know--as does everyone in the White House--that you could also have done a superlative job.
4. Civil service reform will plainly be one of the most enduring and fundamental accomplishments of this Administration.
5. We have got to keep pressing forward to see that implementation of the program realizes the promise of the legislation.
6. I want to help in every way I can. I have necessarily had to concentrate my personal energies on energy, the economy, and SALT. But I need to know how my other major priorities, like reform of the government, are going, and to know of opportunities to remind the public and the government of my personal concern. So keep me informed.

There has been some speculation about Scotty for the Under Secretary job. While we think it unlikely that he would be interested, he might raise this possibility with you. We believe it would be very desirable to recruit a minority person for this position, and working with Shirley Hufstedler, we are close to recommending a strong candidate to you along these lines.

Scotty's numbers are: (O) (202) 632-4724; (H) (202) 363-7584.

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

11-10-79

To Scotty Campbell

I just want to let you know again how much I appreciate your fine work under very difficult conditions. Civil Service reform and its implementation will be one of the historic achievements of our administration. You do so well that you rarely need my personal help, but I trust you will never hesitate to report to me or seek my assistance when you wish.

Your friend,

Jimmy Carter

Energy/Environment

Energy Bill, Interior Funds 2511
Congress moved toward approval of $20 billion in financial incentives to private industry for synthetic fuels development. The actions, taken in two bills, were significant endorsements of a key element in President Carter's energy program. Only one part of the program — the oil "windfall profits" tax — has not passed both houses. The Senate is expected to take up that proposal on Nov. 13.

Baker: Aiming for the GOP Middle 2523
GOP presidential candidate Howard H. Baker Jr. of Tennessee is a creature of Congress who values the qualities that spell success on Capitol Hill — compromise, shrewdness and caution. But it is an open question whether these qualities will land him the nomination.
