To Marjorie McCullough

I want again to express my sympathy. Glendon's life and career were an inspiration to all who knew him, and he will be greatly missed by those of us whose lives he touched.

Rosalynn joins me in the hope that you and your family will be comforted by the thoughts and prayers of your many friends.

Civil service reform is the centerpiece of my efforts to meet the clear demand of the American people for a responsive and streamlined Government. Because of the Senate's action tonight, we are one step closer to a Government that offers its own employees real incentives to do a good job while fully protecting their rights.

The next step is up to the House of Representatives, which will consider the legislation when it returns from Labor Day recess. I hope the House will act promptly, so that all of us can begin to realize the benefits of a well-managed Government.

Death of the Reverend Glendon McCulloch

Statement by the President. August 25, 1978

Rosalynn and I were deeply saddened to learn of the untimely death of our good friend, the Reverend Glendon McCulloch. He was a wise and charitable man whose life and career exemplified the finest qualities of a man of God.

For all of us whose lives he touched, Glendon McCulloch cannot be replaced. We extend our deepest sympathy to Marjorie and the other members of his family.

NOTE: Reverend McCulloch was executive director of the Southern Baptist Brotherhood Commission.

Natural Gas Legislation

White House Statement. August 25, 1978

After nearly 2 years of effort, a Senate-House conference committee reached a natural gas compromise just last week. It does not give anyone everything they demand—but it is fair, balanced, and workable.

The compromise will not provide massive profits for producers that overnight decontrol would allow nor does it provide unrealistically low gas prices. But what it does do is:

- Makes fresh new supplies of natural gas available for homes and industry in every region of the country at prices below alternate fuels these supplies will replace and ensures adequate supplies in every consuming State;
- Provides stability and increased markets and incentives to producers;
- Costs consumers overall no more than under existing law;
- Substantially reduces oil imports that depress our dollar.

The President cannot afford the luxury of exclusive devotion to any single regional or economic interest. Enactment of this compromise is essential to protect the stability of our strong and vital economy, and to protect our dollar and position of economic leadership in the world. The President is convinced that the U.S. Senate and House of Representatives will rise to their responsibilities as the conference committee has already done. The President expects that this matter of critical national importance will not be obscured by other issues. Now is the time for statesmanship and concern for the general welfare, not for endless contention over narrow issues.

NOTE: The statement was read on behalf of the President by Stuart E. Eizenstat, Assistant to the President for Domestic Affairs and Policy, at 2:55 p.m. to reporters assembled in the Briefing Room at the White House. Following his remarks, Secretary of Energy James R. Schlesinger and he held a news conference on the natural gas legislation and the administration's breeder reactor program.

Dear President and Mrs. Carter,

I sincerely hope that your visit to our State has been a pleasant and restful one. The majority of my 28 years on this earth have been spent in Wyoming, and my heart still skips a beat when I first view the Tetons. I hope the impact was equally stunning for the both of you.

My true purpose in writing is to invite you to Worland, and to stay in our home. The Big Horn Mountains are near, and I assure you the fishing will surpass that of the Jackson Hole area. Perhaps next summer will permit time for such a trip.

President Carter, I don't always agree with you, however you have my full and undivided support. Mrs. Carter, your efforts in mental health merit recognition from every individual in this country. The both of you are to be congratulated for your positive contributions to forming a better country, a better world.

Have a safe and enjoyable trip home.

Best Wishes,

Steve Cranfill
