Carter Museum Redesign

Update

Atlanta, GA. - The exhibits and display cases have been removed. The walls have been torn down and the debris has been hauled off.

The carpet has been pulled up and crews are scraping up the carpet adhesive .

The rotunda ceiling has been opened, as crews begin preparing to put in new heating and air conditioning.

The walkway outside library staff offices has been sealed off and the ceiling removed.

The research room where historians view Presidential documents has been emptied and is now a construction site.

Even so, researchers still have access to the library's archives, just in a different place.
